MONDAY ON CBC-TV

Stratford's "Pinafore"

TO OPEN its season of prestige dramas and musical programs, CBC-TV's Festival '61 has chosen the Stratford Festival production of Gilbert and Sullivan's H.M.S. Pinafore. The production features the original Stratford company, directed by Dr. Tyrone Guthrie in collaboration with CBC producer Norman Campbell. This will be the first Stratford Festival production to be seen on television, and also Guthrie's first venture into TV directing. Norman Campbell has produced several other highly original CBC-TV interpretations of Gilbert and Sullivan.

The CBC was fortunate in "capturing" the Pinafore company on its way from Stratford's Avon Theatre to the Phoenix Theatre off Broadway, where it is currently impressing sophisticates of the American theatrical hub with its verve and polish. The 90-minute CBC-TV show was video-taped during a 10-day stopover in Toronto. It includes the original chorus, which had to be broken up before the New York opening, because several of its members were signed up for the Canadian Opera Company Festival in Toronto.

Unlike most TV productions, Pinafore is being presented as an authentic stage performance, rather than as a televised adaptation. Norman Campbell tells us that the theatrical atmosphere was preserved by constructing a little theatre in the studio, complete with theatre seats, an invited audience, a proscenium arch, and curtains. A full orchestra of top Canadian musicians directed, as at Stratford, by Louis Applebaum, was right in the studio, instead of in a separate studio, as is the case in most large-scale TV productions.

"It was interesting to see how we could preserve the theatrical aspects and still have a satisfactory TV production," Campbell says. "What we lost in colour and the alive feeling of the theatre we gained in a more intimate look at the performers than the average theatre-goer ever gets." Viewers should have the same feeling of occasion and fun as they would in the theatre, in the best seat in the house.

Campbell continues: "In the theatre the director's problem is to fill the proscenium arch, spreading his people out to form a balanced stage picture. But if we did that on TV, and kept our cameras far enough back to take them all in, they'd all look about two inches high on the screen. On the other hand, if the camera moved in too close to one group of actors, there'd be arms and heads of others around the edge of the screen, and that would destroy the theatrical feeling. Tyrone Guthrie and I had long, vigorous conferences until we arrived at the right way of handling the situation. It was a stimulating experience for both of us, particularly for me, working with a man who is probably the greatest director of the English-speaking stage."

As for Guthrie — while he has long felt that there are great limitations to the television medium, his days of intensive work with Campbell and his crew spiked a new interest in TV, to the extent that he sat down and wrote a TV play. Guthrie is due in Toronto soon for rehearsals of Robertson Davies' play Leaven of Malice, which will have a short pre-Broadway run there at the Royal Alexandra Theatre starting Oct. 31.

We asked Campbell if there were any other special problems in filming Pinafore. He said that the performers had been so well disciplined by Guthrie at Stratford that the days of intensive rehearsal and dry runs went like clockwork.

The cast's only difficulty, and this was quickly overcome, was remembering new moves, for there had to be adjustments in position to allow for special camera and lighting effects. And, of course, there were cuts in the show to tailor it for a 90-minute production. Many of these were in dialogue, so that most of Gilbert's catchy music remains.

"All the cast had built-in projection and crisp diction, which was delightful for the men operating microphones," says Campbell, "and was quite in keeping with the theatrical performance we were trying to present. If the mikes had to be moved in too closely to the performers, they would have been on-camera, and the illusion would have gone. Of course that sort of projection would be all wrong in an ordinary TV production."

The only major difficulty in staging the show in a studio involved a trap door. For the productions in the Avon and Phoenix Theatres, Guthrie had contrived some neat entrances and exits through a ship's hatch constructed over the trap doors which are standard equipment in most theatres. On a concrete TV studio floor there was no hope of opening up a hatch. But Campbell insisted on preserving this effect. He got around the problem by having the carpenters build up Pinafore's poop deck three feet higher. The hatch was opened as planned, and the cast were able to come and go by crawling a short distance under the ship.

Only one thing went wrong during filming, but thanks to the quick thinking of the actor concerned, it worked out all right. Norman Campbell tells it this way: "It happened at a point near the end of Pinafore where the music builds up and up. The sailors have wrested a gun from Ralph Rack-straw and he and his sweetheart, Josephine, are reunited. Just at that moment, as the Boatswain, played by Douglas Campbell, stands with gun in hand, it's supposed to go off loudly, and he, startled, drops it overboard. During rehearsal the gun fired beautifully every time. On the show itself when Campbell pulled the trigger there was just a tiny click, and then another as he tried again. But he reacted as if there had been an ear-shattering bang, threw the gun overboard, and fortunately the sound of the splash worked. Afterwards we dubbed in a loud gunshot on the tape, and the day was saved."

Guthrie, like Campbell, was determined that every small detail of the performance would be exactly right. There is an amusing scene when a little girl, dashing around and making a nuisance of herself, pinches the bottom of one of the sailors. She had managed this quite uninhibitedly all through the Stratford run, but developed a sudden shyness in the studio at the first rehearsal, and couldn't bring herself to deliver the pinch with conviction. everything, strode on stage, and gave her a lesson that she will never forget in how it should be done.

"You see," he demonstrated, "you grab him firmly in the fleshy part of the hip, squeeze sharply . . ." and the yelp of the victim proved the effectiveness of the Guthrie technique. On the show the little girl carried out her bit of stage business with the hand of a master.

Costumes used in the CBC production are Brian Jackson's originals from Stratford, except for one of Josephine's. Her Stratford outfit was a gorgeous creation of yellow and beige which looked beautiful on stage, but on TV the colors photographed in the same shade of gray and the design of the dress simply disappeared. One more suitable for the demands of television had to be designed for her.

"White," says Campbell, "is the TV technician's nightmare. It can look well, or it can create halos around its wearer. We were a little worried about how the white sailor outfits would photograph. Because the cast were leaving for New York the morning after the show their uniforms could not be tinted. But their dark blue collars relieved the overall whiteness, and the excellent cameras in Studio 7 helped, too." The boys were able to appear in uniforms as spanking white as any captain could hope for, and, being sailors, appropriately without halos.

Following H.M.S. Pinafore, Festival '61 will present Jean Anouilh's Colombe in a 90-minute production on Oct. 17, starring the young American actress Kathleen Widdoes. Among the other dramas this season will be Hugh Walpole's The Old Ladies, starring Martita Hunt, Frances Hyland and Betty Leighton; Shakespeare's Julius Caesar; Ansky's The Dybbuk, starring Luther Adler, Joseph Wiseman and Avra Petrides; Arthur Laurent's Home of the Brave, starring Dino Narizzano; Wilde's Lord Arthur Savile's Crime, starring John Colicos; and Henry James' The Pupil, starring Albert Dekker, William Job and Michel Ray. CBWT—Documentary '60

Today — "The Little Sisters." An authentic record of life in a convent. For this rare film portrait, an NFB camera crew was given permission to invade the serenity of a convent in Hull, Quebec, where cloistered nuns have led a life of work and worship since the order was founded in 1892. Working without restriction, the crews were able to obtain footage of both the light-hearted and the more serious activities and ceremonials of the religious order so widely known in French Canada as "The Little Sisters."

STARS OF "ANGEL"

—Marshall Thompson and Annie Farge. The situation comedy series is seen Sundays on CBC-TV.

Jack Kane Prefers Half-Hour Show

Jack Kane is much happier about his new CBC-TV show this season than he was about last season's program.

Kane's new program, The Jack Kane Show, will run for 30 minutes each Monday. Last year The ford Festival production of the Gilbert and Sullivan masterpiece, directed by Dr. Tyrone Guthrie. Conducted by Louis Applebaum. The rollicking tale of the proud captain's daughter, Josephine, who though pursued by Sir Joseph Porter, First Lord of the Admiralty, gives her heart to Ralph Rackstraw, a humble member of her father's crew.

JACK with SYLVIA MURPHY

Jack Kane Hour was a 60-minute show seen alternate weeks on the Music '60 series.

"The 60-minute format gave us a variety show, with lavish presentations, dancers and elaborate staging," he said. "As such, it was fine, but I prefer the half-hour show where I can feature my instrumentalists. Letters from viewers indicate that this is what they want. In the past, members of the orchestra had been built up into personalities and some viewers were disturbed that they weren't getting into the picture so much last year."

The show this year will have a studio audience, and Jack believes this is good for the men in the band. Playing to an audience helps to bring out the musicians' personalities, he says.

During the season Jack will introduce some new Canadian talent on his program. "We are having two American guests to start the season, but after that I hope to use quite a few new Canadian artists, some of whom have not yet been seen on television," says Kane.

Jack has had several offers from the U.S. for his special musical arrangements and personal appearances, but he has turned them down due to lack of time and because he is taking things easier since having an operation last spring.

Sylvia Murphy, voted best female vocalist in Canada in the 1959 Liberty Awards, is regular vocalist on The Jack Kane Show.

Sylvia left television last spring to await the birth of her third child, Bradley, who is now three months old.

During the summer Sylvia sang alternate weeks on the Billy O'Connor Show on CBC radio.

This will be Sylvia's fourth season with Jack Kane and his orchestra. She was seen every other week when the show was launched on the CBC-TV network in 1957 under the title Music Makers '58.

Paradoxically, by the time parents are experienced—after two or three children—they give up the job, so to speak. This naturally leaves them with a good deal of frustration, and the desire to go and inflict their advice on someone else, on how to bring up their children.—A doctor speaking in the BBC "Woman's Hour."

gary. Now at 41 he is learning English, hopes eventually to start his law training all over again in Canada so he can practise.

These are some of the people viewers will see on The Changing Face, Saturday, Oct. 8 on CBC-TV. The Changing Face, of course, is the face of Canada, and the tens of thousands of immigrants to Canada are the cause of the change.

"Since 1945 there has on an average been an immigrant into Canada every four minutes," says story editor Ron Laplante. "By far the majority of these immigrants have come to the large cities and we have taken Toronto immigrants as representative of the sort of adjustment all have had to make."

The large number of immigrants to Toronto has transformed many aspects of the city's life. A great variety of restaurants serve European and Asia foods for instance. Again, fastest growing sport in Canada is soccer with 3,000 players in 40 teams in Toronto alone, and more than 250,000 people who watched—more than watched baseball.

How well do the new arrivals fit into Canadian society? There are a multitude of views on this. There are plenty of success stories, like that of Camillo Dominic Milani who was a dishwasher and today heads a firm building the largest industrial land development project in Canada costing one hundred million dollars.

And there is the other side of the story. Organizer Art Robbins of the Garment Workers' Union says on the program, "One would have thought that the sweatshop was a thing of the past, but unfortunately in the year 1960 it still exists." And recently protests about exploitation in the construction industry were loud after five Italian immigrants died in Toronto in a collapsed sewer tunnel.

It is probably somewhere in between these extremes that the vast majority of New Canadians live and work. But one difficulty most face in common is that of learning a new language. Last year 11,000 immigrants in Toronto alone took English classes. Many will drop out when they have sufficient English for their purposes or because they are making not enough headway. But, on past performances, 10 to 15 per cent will sit and pass an examination in English equivalent to Grade eight standards.

Not all immigrants to Canada are satisfied with the life they find here. Some return to their homelands. Why? A variety of reasons. Mrs. Laura Schippers, the blunt and forthright editor of a Dutch language newspaper in Toronto gives two: lack of social security, and poor selection by immigration authorities in the countries from where the immigrants come.

Another speaker, Professor John Sawatsky of the University of Toronto, recently completed a three-year study of immigrants in Canada. One of his conclusions: the great majority of immigrants are here to stay.

Two other people well known to Toronto appear on the program: one is Mayor Nathan Phillips and the other Gina Lollobrigida, both of whom have first hand knowledge of the difficulties and rewards of immigration to Canada.

Explorations

The first program in a three-part series of lighthearted satirical dramatizations under the general title of "Three Heroes," highlights some of the special characteristics that mark the heroes of our time. Today—"The Hero on Horseback"—on a studio set where still another Western is in production, our hero (Don Francks) points out some of the changes from real Western life to a young visitor (Rex Hagon). They meet a number of pretty familiar types and walk into a number of situations typical of a Wild West that now belongs to everyone—except the people who once actually lived there.

Stu's Shirts

• Where does Stu Davis get those wonderful wonderful shirts? I know he does not buy them locally because I have searched the city high and low for similar ones, to no avail. Are they CBC costumes specially made for him or can they be purchased? We attend the Calgary Stampede each year and always dress in western regalia and would certainly like to get hold of some exclusive looking shirts like the ones Stu Davis wears.—Mrs. R. K. R., Winnipeg.

His wife makes them.

Disappointed

• I have just had to miss my favourite program—Court of Opinions—due to the translation of a speech by Khrushchev. This irked me more than somewhat. I've had to miss other ones such as Fighting Words, In Reply, Now I Ask You, and BBC's excellent My Word because of special events programs. We can get the U.N. reports from our newspapers, and the "gist" of them from news broadcasts. I would like CBC to arrange things in such a way that these tried and true programs are not taken off the weekly schedule. There are probably many CBC listeners who feel the same as I do.—Mrs. V. C. A., Calgary.

Theme Music

• Could you please tell me the name of the theme music for Outlook? I would also like to know if a recording of it can be purchased.—A. K., Winnipeg.

On television—"The Trumpet" from Volume 2 of "Ten Studies for Trumpet" by Raymon Sabarich, played by Louis Menardi. On radio—"Summer Dance" by Hugo Alfven, on Decca label No. 8753.

NEW OPEN HOUSE HOSTESS

Gwen Grant (right) exchanges smiles with Helen James as she puts her signature to the contract that makes her hostess of CBC-TV's Open House program. Miss Grant, writer, broadcaster and beauty counsellor, replaces Anna Cameron who left the show to pursue an acting career in England. Helen James (left) is assistant supervisor of public affairs (women's interests) for the CBC. Open House returns to the CBC-TV network Monday, October 17.

DIG THAT TV HERO

Paladin? No, J. Frank Willis has gun (left) while Don Francks has girl (Corinne Conley) in "The Hero On Horseback," on CBC-TV's Explorations, this Wednesday, Oct. 12, in the first of three satires taking a playful dig at the heroes of our time—the TV heroes.

Southeast Asia— A Different Culture

Four programs prepared by CBC and the Canadian Association of Adult Education

TO THE DUTCH, silence means consent. To the Indonesians, a courteous people, silence is more a way of showing disagreement without baldly and impolitely saying so. And when Dutch and Indonesians were negotiating the transition from colony to independence, the interpretation of silence often caused serious misunderstanding.

An Indonesian diplomat uses this fact to explain the importance of apparently insignificant cultural details, on a new four-part radio series, Southeast Asia: A Different Culture. The program, to be heard on Thursdays, is a joint project of the CBC and the Canadian Association of Adult Education.

The programs include a Chinese student from Malaya studying medicine in Toronto; a psychiatrist from Thailand, and his wife, an Indonesian Moslem lecturing on history at a Canadian University; a Vietnamese, a Chinese Indonesian, and a Chinese Malayan—all students in Canada or the United States; and a Thai lawyer, member of the Thai Royal family, now working in Adult Education.

As well as these Southeast Asians, the program includes Dr. William Line of the Psychology Department of the University of Toronto, and Dr. Marjorie King of the Canadian Mental Health Association, both of whom spent time in Thailand setting up an institute for child study; and Dr. Nathan Keyfitz, of the Department of Political Economy at the University of Toronto who has spent much time in Southeast Asia, including a period as economic consultant in Indonesia.

How deep do differences in culture go? Preston James, of Syracuse University, recently said, "Ancient religions taught Asians to think about nature and man in terms very different to those developed in Europe and America. The Oriental who has not been trained in methods of Western science thinks of the world around him as it touches his senses—he feels it, he tastes it, he looks at its beauties, he smells its fragrance. Thinking in the abstract, that is not easy. Foreign to him also are ideas of equality before the law. The Oriental way of living and thinking teaches acceptance, passive resistance, patience; the ideal is to live in harmony with nature, not to control or change it."

How accurate are such generalizations? These programs show how Asians themselves react to such ideas. Most, for instance, found the economic motive, the materialism, "the rat race" as four of them called it, of North American life gave it a quality quite different to their Southeast Asian life, yet one found North American life tranquil and easy-going after life in his home city. "But on one thing all were agreed: respect for parents by children is greater in Southeast Asia than in North America," says Catherine McLean of the Canadian Association of Adult Education who is writing the script.

Perhaps language more than anything else reflects differences in temperament and outlook. To a Canadian, the epithet "cool-hearted" does not sound particularly complimentary, yet to the inhabitants of Southeast Asia where coolness is a desirable state, the description "cool-hearted" is as complimentary as "warm-hearted" is to a Canadian.

More significantly, perhaps, in the language of Thailand, the word hockey game, viewers want to see a relaxed, informal show. Basically, this year's Juliette show will retain the intimate style of past seasons — expanded from 20 minutes to half an hour."

The Romeos, vocal quartet, coached by Gino Silvi, and the Bill Isbister orchestra will also return for another season. During the season a quartet of female vocalists will sing on an occasional basis, both on and off camera.

Gisele MacKenzie Brother Georges In Oct. 16 Special

WINNIPEG'S Gisele MacKenzie returns to Canada at the end of September to begin rehearsals for The Gisele MacKenzie Special, to be seen Sunday, Oct. 16, on the CBC-TV network from Toronto.

GISELE

Producer Stan Harris will build the show around the star's rise to the big time.

Guests on The Gisele MacKenzie Special are comedian Jack Benny, Gisele's brother, Georges LaFleche, singers Bob Crosby and Snooky Lanson, and Jack Regas, her dance partner and choreographer.

"I've subtitled the show The Men in Her Life," says Harris.

Crosby, Benny, Lanson and Regas have all been associated with Gisele's career in the United States. Jack Benny's contributions to the program have been pre-recorded.

Jack Kane and his Music Makers will provide music on the show. Script writers for The Gisele MacKenzie Special will be John Aylesworth and Frank Peppiatt. Bill Zaharuk will design the sets, and costumes will be designed by Shirley Thompson. Assisting Regas with choreography will be Andy Body.

Harris first met Gisele in New York a year ago, when he was working on Perry Presents, the 1959 summer replacement for the Perry Como Show. A few weeks ago, he went to Hollywood to discuss the special with her and Bob

MUSIC ON RADIO

TWO contemporary, famous, and sharply contrasted figures from musical history are presented prominently for our consideration this week. Our differing responses to them reflect the differences between them. Beethoven (New York Philharmonic, Saturday, Oct. 8, and Festivals from Europe, Friday night) we regard with admiration, and perhaps something like awe, while our feeling for Schubert (Canadian Concert Hall, Sunday night, Distinguished Artists, Tuesday night, and Festivals from Europe, Friday night) is tinged with pity. Both contribute nobly to our spiritual enrichment, and entertain us lavishly in the process.

Schubert died in November of 1828, twenty months later than Beethoven. Both lived, worked and died in Vienna, but Beethoven was on his death-bed before he became aware of the existence of his younger contemporary, some of whose songs he praised warmly. Schubert carried a torch at Beethoven's funeral—and that was the total extent of the contact between the two. Each came under much the same influences of tradition and education, but their varying temperaments and characters wrought on the common heritage to very different purposes. One might, perhaps, sum it up by saying that Beethoven, like Bach, was a philosopher given to prolonged and deep meditation on the more profound mysteries of life and experience and more-or-less consciously striving to express in his music the feelings engendered by such thoughts, whereas Schubert, like Mozart, was a spontaneous creator, a stranger to such striving, whose music came to him unbidden, and gushed from him "in profuse strains of unpremeditated art," to borrow Shelley's phrase.

This is not, of course, to accuse Beethoven of any lack of spontaneity, nor Schubert of superficiality, or want of depth (though his reputation did, in fact, suffer at one time from a popular misapprehension to that effect). Inspired creation like Beethoven's cannot be brought about by cold-blooded mechanical cerebration; and work that has lasted like Schubert's clearly proceeds from intellectual and emotional maturity. Rather is it a question of which elements predominate, and of what effect that predominance has on the character of their productions. Beethoven's reflective methods imposed close control on every stage of the composing process, and led to the agonizing conflict between the creative force and the critical curb that dominated his working activities, and even shattered the tranquility of his daily living—but resulted in a synthesis of overwhelming power and majesty, unequalled before or since.

Schubert's essentially unreflecting processes, on the other hand, led to a steady outpouring — a flood of production — that taxed both his technical powers and his physical stamina. When one considers the shortness of his life (he died at 31), the extreme discomfort in which so much of it was passed (the factors that arouse our pity), and the sheer quantity of his output, the marvel is not that he suffered occasional lapses, but that he maintained so high a standard. Despite the endless repetition to which it is subjected, the familiarity his music has acquired is not, in the main, of the kind that cloy, or becomes wearisome; and the best of it has a perennial freshness and charm that recaptures for us, in some measure, the excitement of its creation. A hallmark, surely, of a truly original mind.

Oberammergau

The story of the Bavarian village and its famous Passion Play, Sunday on radio

EVERY 10 years the little Bavarian Alpine village of Oberammergau suddenly talks on new life. Cobblers, innkeepers, farmers and schoolgirls leave their accustomed tasks to dress in Biblical costumes and bring the Passion Play to life for thousands of visitors from all over the world. Each of the 80 performances spread over five months takes eight hours, with a two-hour break for lunch.

This world-famous event is the result of a solemn vow taken by residents of the village in 1632 when the black plague was claiming heavy toll. They promised God that if He would spare them they would stage a play about Christ's sufferings every 10 years. Except for two wartime postponements they have kept their vow. This year the 35th performance has attracted hordes of tourists and pilgrims.

The theatre, used only for this production, seats 5,200. The greater part of the stage is open to the sky, with sun-shafts offering natural spotlights, or thunder and lightning emphasizing the bittersweet

An assurance that ultimate values of goodness and beauty can never be shaken by the pursuit of truth, wherever it may lead, is perhaps the sign of a robust faith than is shown by recoil from every new and seemingly disturbing fact.—Sir Cyril Hinshelwood, President of the Royal Society, in his tercentenary address, broadcast by the BBC.

GISELE AND GEORGES

A mass demand for education is now swamping our educational system in the United States, and that's true in every country as people get richer. The first thing they want is education for their children, which is why all the educational plans in the world are under such severe strain. It isn't a sign of decay; it's a sign of health and growth. — Eugene Restow, Dean of Yale Law School, on BBC.

This year's permanent set will again suggest a contemporary-style home, to enhance the intimate atmosphere of the show.

Juliette's gowns this season will be designed by Stuart Mackay, who created the spectacular wardrobe she wore in last season's "special" — An Hour with Juliette. Mackay was designer for The Hit Parade last season, and recently for the grandstand show at the Canadian National Exhibition.

The Juliette show will again be written by Alex Barris, Toronto columnist and TV script writer. Each show will be videotaped a week in advance of telecast date.

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

Dr. Healey Willan. The well-known Canadian composer, Dr. Healey Willan, celebrates his eightieth birthday today. Dr. Willan is best known as a composer of Church music, and he is organist and choirmaster of the Church of St. Mary Magdelene in Toronto. He talks with Ruby Mercer, who will be remembered by Matinee listeners for her programs on Matinee in August, when Betty Tomlinson was on vacation.

Widows. Montreal freelance broadcaster, Betty Shapiro, has interviewed widows from a variety of different walks of life, to find out how they have reorganized their lives, and what changes and adjustments they have had to make. Mrs. Shapiro is a regular contributor to Matinee.

CWL Convention. The Catholic Women's League of Canada is holding its National Convention at Edmonton from October 5-7, and there'll be a special report on Matinee today.

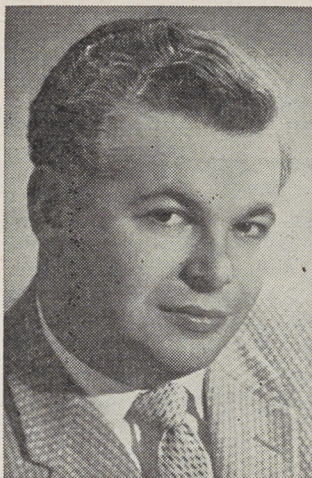

Animal Characters. Happy Bonnell has chosen Heathcliffe for the last of her present series of talks on animal characters. And Heathcliffe is quite a character—he's a white llama, who is large and woolly and an awful snob. Mrs. Bonnell is known as "Happy" to a large number of people and animals at Newmarket, and she has been heard frequently on Matinee since its early days.

SCHOOL BROADCASTS

Manitoba. "Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra Student's Concert." Conducted by Victor Feldbrill. (Elementary grades). This season the programs will include dance music, highly descriptive music associated with the stage and one serious composition by one of the world's greatest composers. An innovation this year will be the singing of a simple round in which our great theatre and radio audience will have a chance to participate. Mr. Feldbrill will teach the round and will then use it to illustrate the more complicated form of "The Little Fugue" which will follow.

story of the play. It has always been a rule that all members of the colossal cast must have been born or have lived a long time in Oberammergau. Rehearsals take six months.

First, a 22-member festival committee, headed by the mayor, chooses the 1,400 actors and actresses, the 46-voice choir and the 50-piece orchestra. Performers are chosen for their good character as well as their artistic talents.

In a special broadcast recorded in Oberammergau you CBC radio listeners will meet some of the cast this Sunday afternoon. Portions of the actual play will be included in the program. Keith Barry will interview actor Anton Preisinger, an innkeeper and the father of five, who plays the role of Christ; Imgaard Dengg, who appears as Mary; Alfred O. Zwinck, a wood-carver (the village does a humming souvenir business), Professor Gregor Honig, a retired school teacher; and the parish priest, Father Hamberger, who talks of the significance of the play to the villagers and the world. Barry has also recorded village bells and music of the district.

About fifty years ago, maximum stature was not reached until the age of about twenty-nine. In the prosperous classes of western Europe and America it is now reached at about nineteen in boys and sixteen to seventeen in girls, and the final average height has increased by anything up to five centimetres. — Alex Comfort, Nuffield Research fellow at University College, London, on BBC.

for "love" is also the word for "child," and so also the word for "old age and the word for "venerable."

The Asians speaking on the programs are men and women of high intelligence who are familiar with Western ways as well as their own. This has proved both a help and a hindrance in identifying parallels and differences between Western and Eastern ways of life. But the conversations ranged far: from the attitudes underlying family relationships to those underlying religious beliefs, from the concepts of education, to those of work and leisure.

Producer for Southeast Asia: A Different Culture, is Margaret Lyons. The program was supported and encouraged by the Canadian National Commission for UNESCO as a contribution to "The Mutual Appreciation of Eastern and Western Cultural Values."

"La Strada" Theme

• Could you tell me the name of the theme music of La Strada, the Italian movie presented last night on CBC-TV? Is it available on records?—Miss N. W., Winnipeg.

This tune is recorded on the following labels: Columbia WL 107 (12"), MGM 3220, 3302, and 3397 (all 12") and Victor 47-6623 (45 r.p.m.). It was composed by M. Goldierei and N. Rota and was used in the U.S. in the popular song "You and You Alone."

Twilight Zone

• Mrs. C. S. G.'s comment (Mailbag, Sept. 25-Oct. 1) that The Twilight Zone is "mentally unhealthy" is ridiculous. I often find myself discussing with other high school students. Rod Serling's ideas about time and the fifth dimension which he develops in my favourite program—The Twilight Zone.—R. C. B., Winnipeg.

• I hope you will never remove The Twilight Zone. If it were "mentally unhealthy," as one reader commented, then our thinking would be quite backward. Also, please bring back the Concert Hour.—A. S., (no address).

If A.S. lives within range of CBWFT, Winnipeg, he will again be able to see "L'Heure du Concert."

Pit Cooker

• Anything that Kerry Wood writes is for me. I haven't got the patience or the time to study wild life, and probably wouldn't interpret it right if I did, but I find his articles of absorbing interest. So when I read his article about pit cookers in the CBC Times I said to my wife, "I'm going to try that." With the article right in front of us we did everything according to Hoyle . . . Those ducks really melted in your mouth. But there was one catch that took the icing off the cake: I burned enough wood to keep us warm for about half the winter!—J. W. G., Bashaw, Alta.
